

The Lantern Walk

November 7, 2021

The weather forecast had been ominous all week long. For once, unlike the hurricane predictions of recent years, they got the forecast right. The rain started Friday and it poured all day Saturday. The temperature had plunged and was unseasonably cold.

Sunday morning conditions improved, but not by much. Early Sunday morning, no one could have imagined the weather treat we were in store for later in the day. As some of us emerged from the candle lit pine grove, the sun had set, the wind was still and there was the waxing crescent moon with Venus trailing right behind. As one person wrote the next day, “I was so gratified by the magnificent autumn eve we were given.”

A heartfelt thanks to all Lantern Walk volunteers and all those that shared photos. We appreciate your efforts and promise that next time we will do better in implementing your plans!
